Banned Words Reference

- NEVER use any word from the Banned Words list. If you catch yourself reaching for a fancy verb, use the plain English equivalent instead.
- No fluffy adjectives from the Banned Words list. If something is good, SHOW why with specifics — don't label it with empty superlatives.
- Use simple words over fancy ones: 'help' not 'facilitate', 'use' not 'utilize', 'to' not 'in order to', 'because' not 'due to the fact that', 'improve' not 'optimize'.

Banned Phrases

- NEVER open with: 'In today's...', 'Let's face it', 'Let's be honest', 'Picture this:', 'Imagine this:', 'You might be wondering', 'Here's the thing', 'The truth is', 'The reality is', 'Let's dive in'.
- NEVER close with: 'In conclusion', 'To sum up', 'At the end of the day', 'Key takeaways:', 'Final thoughts:', 'Ready to take your X to the next level?', 'The time to act is now', 'What are you waiting for?'.
- No business buzzwords: 'synergy', 'ecosystem', 'touchpoint', 'bandwidth', 'low-hanging fruit', 'move the needle', 'paradigm shift', 'thought leader', 'best practices', 'value-add', 'end-to-end', 'table stakes'.

Structural Patterns

- No hedging language: avoid 'It's worth noting that', 'It's important to understand', 'It should be mentioned', 'One might argue', 'It could be said'. Commit to statements — don't soften every claim with 'may', 'might', 'potentially', 'arguably'.
- No mechanical transitions: don't start sentences with 'However,', 'Moreover,', 'Furthermore,', 'Additionally,', 'Nevertheless,', 'Consequently,', 'Thus,'. Let ideas flow naturally.
- No 'not only/just X, but also Y' structures. No 'While X is important, Y is crucial'. No 'On one hand... on the other hand'. Write direct statements instead.

- No meta-commentary: never say 'As mentioned earlier', 'As we discussed', 'Remember that', 'Don't forget', 'Keep in mind that'. Don't tell the reader what you're about to tell them.

Tone & Formatting

- No false enthusiasm: no excessive exclamation points, no 'Exciting news!', 'Amazing results!', 'Incredible impact!'. If something is good, show why — don't shout it.
- No fake relatability: never say 'We've all been there', 'You know the feeling', 'Sound familiar?'. Don't create strawman problems or oversimplify emotions.
- No rhetorical question filler: don't use 'Why does this matter?', 'What does this mean for you?', 'So what's the solution?' as lazy transitions. Don't ask a question then immediately answer it.
- No connector clichés: never use 'That's where X comes in', 'This is where X shines', 'Enter: [solution]', 'But wait, there's more', 'And that's not all'.
- Don't overuse em dashes (—) for dramatic pauses. Don't default to bullet points when a paragraph works better. Don't put a colon before every explanation. Don't bold every key term mechanically. Don't use excessive headers or subheaders for short content.
- Vary sentence structure and paragraph length naturally. Don't make every paragraph 3-4 sentences. Don't start multiple sentences the same way. Don't repeat the same key term in every sentence.
- No overexplaining: don't explain concepts the audience already knows. Don't use 100 words when 20 will do. If it needs a 'TLDR' it's too long.
- No vague attribution: never say 'Studies show', 'Research indicates', 'According to experts', 'X% of businesses' without naming the specific source.

LinkedIn Bro Formulas

- NEVER use these viral formulas: 'In a world where [X], [Y] becomes [Z]' / 'Most people [lazy thing]. The few who win [hard thing]' / 'Stop doing X. Start doing Y' / 'It's not [A]. It's not [B]. It's [C]' / 'If you're not [doing X], you're already behind' / 'The real [work] isn't [visible]. It's [invisible]' / 'You don't need more [resource]. You need [virtue]' / 'It's never been easier to [X]. Never been harder to [Y]'. Write original structures.

Padding Phrases

- Cut zero-value padding: never write 'plays a crucial role in', 'highlighting the importance of', 'it is important to remember that', 'it is essential to note', 'it is worth mentioning that', 'may potentially offer some benefits', 'often considered to be'. Every sentence must add new information.

Active Voice

- Write in active voice with 'I' and 'you'. Never default to passive ('it was found that', 'it can be argued', 'this is often seen as'). Name the actor. Own your statements.

Rule of Three

- Don't always group things in threes. AI defaults to exactly 3 examples, 3 adjectives, 3 bullet points. Vary your lists — use 2, 4, or 5 items. If you list 3 things, make sure it's because there ARE exactly 3, not because it sounds nice.

Flattery & Superlatives

- No unearned superlatives: never call something 'fascinating', 'remarkable', 'extraordinary', 'impressive', 'incredible' unless you prove WHY with a specific detail. Show, don't label. 'Revenue grew 340% in 6 months' beats 'achieved remarkable growth'.

Participial "-ing" Endings

- Avoid empty '-ing' analysis at the end of sentences: '...showcasing the importance of X', '...highlighting his commitment to Y', '...demonstrating the power of Z', '...underscoring the need for W'. These add opinion disguised as analysis. State the fact and move on.

"From X to Y" Fake Breadth

- No 'from X to Y' range constructions that fake breadth: 'from ancient traditions to modern innovations', 'from small startups to Fortune 500 companies', 'from beginners to seasoned professionals'. Be specific about WHO and WHAT instead of gesturing at a range.

Synonym Swapping

- Don't swap synonyms to avoid repetition. If you're talking about a 'company', keep saying 'company' — don't rotate through 'organization', 'enterprise', 'firm', 'establishment'. Artificial vocabulary variety sounds robotic. Repeat the clear word.

Real over Hypothetical

- Use real examples, not hypothetical ones. Don't write 'Imagine a startup that...' or 'Consider a scenario where...' — name a real company, a real person, a real number. If you don't have a real example, make your point without one rather than fabricating it.

Fake Reveals & FOMO

- No fake authority reveals: 'Here's what nobody tells you', 'The secret is', 'Here's the truth', 'What most people get wrong'. These promise insider knowledge then deliver obvious observations. Just state the insight directly.
